

Forest Mamas & Babies

By Stan Tekiela

Gray Wolf

A baby gray wolf is called a pup.

A wolf mother usually has four to six pups per year. They are born in a den, which is often a hole dug into the ground. The mother feeds the pups milk for several weeks before they begin to eat meat.

A Love of Wildlife Begins Here

Put learning in the hands of your youngest nature lovers. Introduce 10 baby critters (and their moms!) commonly found in forests across North America. Bears, moose, porcupines, and more, the animals presented here represent some of the most beloved forest wildlife.

Stan Tekiela is a naturalist, wildlife photographer, and the author of more than 190 books. He has received various national and regional awards for his books and photographs.
