

Prairie Mamas & Babies

By Stan Tekiela

Prairie Dog

A baby prairie dog is called a pup.

Prairie dog mothers give birth once a year. They have up to eight pups in a prairie dog “town,” which has many tunnels and chambers. Prairie dog mothers give birth underground in special rooms in the towns.

A Love of Wildlife Begins Here

Put learning in the hands of your youngest nature lovers. Introduce 10 baby critters (and their moms!) commonly found on grasslands across North America. Birds, bison, rabbits, and more, the animals presented here represent some of the most beloved prairie wildlife.

Stan Tekiela is a naturalist, wildlife photographer, and the author of more than 190 books. He has received various national and regional awards for his books and photographs.
